Paloma

Spring / Summer 19 New Zealand

The Journey Continues

For over 30 years, NAJO has been sharing the storytelling magic of silver jewellery through flawless designs that play in the space between unconventionality and timelessness. Bold and artistic, NAJO jewellery encourages confident and beautiful self-expression as individuals embrace the potent symbolic gesture of adornment.

The NAJO story began in Mexico in 1986 when, as a young backpacker, Jo Tory realised that wearing elegant artisan jewellery could have transformational powers. Mexico became Jo's home where she built lasting relationships with artisan silversmiths who remain her trusted craftsmen.

Today, NAJO is Australia's leading sterling silver jewellery designer, launching two new collections each year to accompany its celebrated Signature and Essentials pieces.

"We love to create jewellery that plays in the space between unconventionality and timelessness. We believe in individualism and the joy in expressing who you are and how you feel. Our jewellery will weave its way into your consciousness and remain part of your story forever."

- Jo Tory, Founder NAJO

Glossary

Amazonite is also known as the Amazon Stone. It is a gemstone that varies in colour from mint green to aqua green. Its unique colour is due to iron impurities and can sometimes resemble nephrite and jadeite. Amazonite's appearance is very distinctive with its grid-like, mottled, green and white pattern. It is variety of microcline feldspar.

Amethyst is a purple variety of quartz. Its colour can vary from light pinkish violet to a deep purple. The best varieties can be found in Siberia, Sri Lanka and Brazil. Amethyst is the birthstone of February.

Apatite is a phosphate mineral that occurs in crystal form, and gemstone quality is quite rare. Apatite is composed of calcium phosphate, the same material that makes up teeth and bones and its hardness is rated 5 on the Mohs scale. Gemstone quality apatite generally comes in blue to green and golden colouring

Aquamarine is a blue form of beryl, which is a mineral composed of beryllium aluminium cyclosilicate.

Black Agate and Black Onyx are both forms of chalcedony, a member of the quartz family. In their natural form both materials show bands or streaks, thus both are usually enhanced with dye to produce an even colour. These stones can be sandblasted to create a matte texture.

Blue Lace Agate is a form of chalcedony and is named for its lace-like patterns. The pale blue is its natural color, unlike other agates that are often dyed. Blue lace agate is found in Africa and is a particularly hard stone.

Carnelian is a form of the mineral chalcedony. It can vary greatly in colour from pale orange to dark, reddish brown and obtains its colour from the iron content in the stone.

Chalcedony has a waxy luster and may be semitransparent or translucent. It comes in a variety of colours, mainly pink, aqua, pale blue and soft yellow.

Citrine is a variety of quartz and ranges in colour from pale yellow to brown (caused by iron impurities). Natural citrines are rare, most commercial citrines are heat - treated amethyst.

Glossary

Crystal is a quartz that is either fully or nearly transparent and is either colourless or only slightly tinged.

Dumortierite is a fibrous variably coloured aluminium boro-silicate mineral which is used in the manufacture of high grade porcelain. Color can vary from brown/blue to violet/pink. Sometimes mistaken for sodalite.

Freshwater pearls are formed by inserting a plastic or shell nucleus inside a mollusc. The mollusc secretes a solution which forms around the nucleus and eventually develops into a pearl.

Garnet is a silicate mineral that has been used since the Bronze Age as a gemstone. It is generally a darkish red colour but can be found in orange, yellow and green

Gold Obsidian is a naturally occurring volcanic glass formed as a result of quickly cooled lava. It is very hard and brittle. It is black/brown usually with impurities and inclusions of magnetite, an iron oxide.

lolite is the gem variety of the mineral Cordierite. It describes the transparent to a translucent form Cordierite and has recently become a popular gemstone. lolite can be a light to deep blue, and usually a purplish tinge to it. It is said to help recover balance and restore a sense of perspective.

Lemon Quartz is a trade name for a lemon-yellow variety of colour enhanced transparent quartz. The clear quartz is subjected to gamma-ray irradiation and mild heat treatment to achieve the soft lemon colour. It is also known as Oro Verde Quartz.

Mabe pearls are like freshwater pearls, created by inserting a domed nucleus into a mollusc. The nacre forms over the nucleus and the mollusc shell forms the mabe's base. The mabe, still including its nucleus, is cut out from the mollusc shell.

Moonstone has a pearly, opalescent lustre caused by layers of feldspar. Moonstone became very popular in the Art Nouveau period.

Glossary

Morganite also known as 'pink beryl', is a rose - coloured gem-quality beryl. Beryl is a mineral composed of beryllium aluminium cyclosilicate. Morganite may also be orange/yellowish in colour.

Peridot is one of the few gemstones that occur in only one colour, an olive green. The shade depends on how much iron is contained in the crystal structure so the colour can vary from greenish-brown to yellow -green.

Prehnite is a strong crystal, resistant to pressures and scratching. It is composed of aluminium, calcium and silicon. It is a soft green colour and has a translucent, pearly lustre.

Reconstituted (stabilised or pressed) turquoise is a reconstructed stone that is a mixture of crushed natural stone with a strong acrylic resin that creates a more affordable alternative to its more costly natural stone.

Rose Quartz gets its soft pink colour from traces of titanium, manganese and iron. Quartz is one of the most abundant minerals in the earth's crust and has many colour varieties.

Smoky Quartz is a brownish variety of quartz. It ranges in clarity from complete transparency to a rich brown-grey crystal that is almost opaque . Some can almost appear black. The smoky colour results from free silicon in the quartz from natural irradiation.

Stainless steel is a rust resistant iron-carbon alloy. Due to its hard metal state it cannot be re-sized or engraved on.

Sterling Silver is 92.5% pure silver and 7.5% of metal such as copper, zinc or platinum to make up 100%. Pure silver, which is very soft, is mixed with these other metals to increase its strength, malleability and durability.

Tumbaga is an alloy of 20%zinc and 80%copper and has a golden yellow colour. Tumbaga is incorporated into some of our products we manufacture in Mexico.

Production Processes

Hand made Most of Najo's Mexican silver is handmade using, for example, metal sheeting and dies where the metal sheet is pressed into a die (concave shape) so that it forms the shape of the die. The shapes are then hand soldered together to form the piece of jewellery. Another hand-made process is 'drawing' or forcing silver through a hole so it is extruded as a wire or tube, which can then be used to make rings, bangles, chain etc.

Lost wax casting The lost wax jewellery casting process starts with a master model of the piece to be recreated. A mould is made of the master model which is injected with wax to create a wax replica of the original piece. Inside a flask, the wax replica is surrounded by plaster. The flask is placed into an oven and the wax is completely melted from the mould. A hollow void is left in its place which is then filled with molten metal. Once cooled the piece is cleaned, polished and finished.

Stamping A process used to make light-weight jewellery. Silver sheets are stamped with dies (like cookie cutters) to produce cut-out shapes which are then assembled into jewellery. Light-weight earrings, pendants and charms are often made in this manner.

Electroforming A very complex and labour-intensive process in which silver is electroplated onto a shape, usually made of wax. The shape is submerged into a bath and treated with a solution that forms a thin base-metal layer over the wax. It is then submerged for hours in another solution in order for a very thick silver layer to develop over the base-metal layer. When finished, the shape is warmed so the wax interior melts, leaving the finished piece of silver. Sometimes, electroformed designs retain a resin base within them to prevent denting of the jewellery.

Oxidation Silver is treated with a solution called "liver of sulphur" to turn it black. The silver piece is then polished so that the black finish remains only in the indentations. It is often used to give jewellery an antique appearance, or to highlight the details of design.

Electroplating of metal is achieved by submerging the jewellery in a solution that has an electric current running through it which causes a thin layer of silver/gold etc to build up on the jewellery. Plating is used to improve appearance and increase scratch resistance. The thickness of the plating will be determined by the length of time it remains in the plating bath.

Italian and Asian silver is often silver plated to give it a bright, white appearance. Mexican silver is not silver plated because it is hand polished, which also gives it a bright appearance.

Najo gold plated jewellery is usually 14 or 18 karat, and varies between 1 to 2 microns in thickness. Rhodium Plating gives silver the colour of white gold and is more popular in Europe.

Stone-set jewellery is usually rhodium plated. Rhodium Plating gives silver a dark grey to black finish.

Steel IP plating (or ion plating) on steel is a process that is carried out in a vacuum environment with very low pressure, electricity and heat. Ion plated stainless steel is extremely hard-wearing and corrosion resistant. It can be cared for with gentle use of a soft cloth or washing in warm, soapy water.

Anti-tarnish plating Most Najo jewellery is anti-tarnish plated, which reduces tarnishing and protects gold plating.
